But that doesn't mean the date change will not be a big deal for some shoppers. According to the National Retail Federation, holiday shopping for this year will be up 4 percent over last year's figures, but it will be the lowest increase since 2010. Although the official day-to-day weather forecast for the city of New York is 54, New York City resident Kuttin Krishnan, who goes by the name of Kultivate, told The New York Post that he is prepared for the rain. "I like to shop on the weekends so I don't mind the showers," said Krishnan. "I'm not a crazy shopper, just like any of us. The most important thing for me is the deals and the excitement of the crowds." According to the Huffington Post, the average family will spend $967.17 on goods and services during the shopping season. That's not only slightly more than last year's average of $970.72, but is also less than the $1,101.95 spent in 2011. A "crowdsourcing" website, Reddit, was recently flooded with Black Friday posts and news related to the best deals. In fact, more than 200,000 posts related to the 6d1f23a050
